

Tavian Josenberger

Born: 10/23/2001 (24)

Bats: Switch Height: 5'11"

Primary Position: UTIL Secondary Position(s): OF

Throws: Right Weight: 185 lbs

Evaluator: Sean Negron

Physical/Health

MLB ETA 2027 | Risk Factor High | OFP 45

Tavian's young still at 24 and was dealing with lingering injuries for a two-year period. He has had an injury history dating back to his senior year in Arkansas. Tall and slim-fit build with long legs and small waist. Durable, athletic body. Subject to wear and tear more but takes good care of his body on and off the field. Looks to turn the page from this injury riddled season and start fresh in 2026.

Report Date: 10/10/2024 | 10/07/2025

Dates Seen: 04/09/2024 - 08/13/2024 | 09/03/2025 - 09/06/2025

Affiliate: Chesapeake Baysox (AA)- Orioles

Tool	Future Grade	Report
Hit	40	Tavian had some success as a right-handed bat this season but dealt with nagging injuries and it clearly affected him on the field, especially in the batter's box. Clean flat two-handed swing as a right hander and hard upward swing as a lefty. Shows more promise this year as a righty vs lefty pitcher. Still tremendous potential to get that turned around. As a switch hitter, his swing is in a linear path with clear bat control. Can get the barrel around then high pitch and does well getting down for the low in the zone pitches. Not an average type of hitter but has high level plate discipline. Works counts well to keep pitchers honest. He seems to struggle catching up to the high up in the zone pitches as a lefty which is what RHP have exploited on him all season. Separates the BA from OBP nicely with his ability to see pitches and draw walks.
Power	35	Tavian has a bit of pop, mainly from the left side. He has above-average plate discipline, waits for his pitch and knows how to push thru the ball when getting around it. Right-handed swing is a bit more compact with a tiny hitch that requires a pull to gain more power. Average raw power. Had a harder time getting the barrel around as a lefty to hit for power. Needs more strength to utilize power into his game. More of a gap-to- gap hitter with exceptional speed to grab XBH much easier than the average hitter.

Baserunning & Speed	70	Rare speed. Very quick out of the box on both sides of the box. A threat to run any time he can get on base. Can turn any single into a double potentially with how well he utilizes his speed into his baserunning agility and awareness. Infield singles are possible with his speed. Green-light guy on the paths. Dangerous threat anytime he's on the field using his speed. Forces defense to rush plays.
Glove	55	Plays every position but first base. Solid defender who can play almost every position. Works well with his speed and agility to get to the ball and mostly keep it in front of him. Quick reaction and footwork. Good fluidity and soft hands. Very athletic with great body control with his movements. Made him more of an outfield threat in 2025, worked well in the corners and has provided the needed and reliable glove.
Arm	45	Below average arm strength but solid accuracy and plants his feet very well. Quickly sets and fires the ball well. He can still develop his arm strength to become a real super utility player. His speed and glove make his defense solid to compensate for his arm strength. Works through each position like it's his main position.

Overall

Josenberger still has upside to be a real utility threat in the majors. He needs to have less injuries and a more stylistic approach as a lefty. The injury bug has really taken a hold on his career as he has great utility upside but struggles to stay on the field a whole season. Really moves well around the diamond, on the basepaths, and on defense. Keeps the ball in front of him and can make the tough play. He loves the game more than the next person. If he can develop his strength and rehab his body well in 2026, he can become a useful plug for Baltimore sooner rather than later. He needs a more refined approach as an LHB. Find ways to get the barrel around faster, higher competition is on the horizon. Still will go through body maturation and will develop into a more all-around hitter that can put the ball anywhere no matter where he stands in the batter's box.

Hayden Mullins

Born: 10/23/2001

Bats: Left Throws: Left Height: 6'0" Weight: 195 lbs

Primary Position: Pitcher Secondary Position(s): N/A

Physical/Health

MLB ETA 2027 | Risk Factor Medium | OFP 50

Average height, lean muscular build. Has good physicality. Subject to wear and tear. Can handle the seasonal lifestyle. Stayed healthy majority of his professional career. With time and growth, He should be able to add strength and durability to the long minor league seasons. Dealt with elbow lingering issues since 2019, TJ in 2022. Hayden was fully healthy in 2024.

Dates Seen: 08/13/2024- 08/18/2024

Evaluator: Sean Negron

Report Date: 12/01/24 | 12/05/25

Affiliate: Greenville Drive (High A) – Boston Red Sox

Tool

Future Grade

Report

Fastball

55

Low 90's fastball with a small tail. Topped at 95 mph. First full season in pro ball was solid but was just coming into his own. Mullins doesn't show high velo. Has hitters chase high in the zone. Has a funky delivery with a high leg kick and the ball hidden behind him with a lower release point to throw off the hitters. Good movement with the fastball but struggles to find consistency with his command at times. Spent most of 2025 in AA and threw the fastball well, making it more of a prominent strikeout pitch. Command a little better but still shows flashes of inconsistency at times with too many walks.

Slider

60

With the big leg kick and torque provides for much more horizontal spin when tracking it through the zone. Will sit in the low 80's on velo. Presents a harder thrown ball more like a cutter at times. Some sliders look almost like sweepers and some like cutters with added velo. Makes it a dangerous 2-pitch combo with his fastball.. The way he can develop it into almost two different pitches. Needs more control and strength to develop higher velo and more cutting action to find the strike zone..

Changeup

50

This pitch is what separates him in my eyes from being a starter and being more suited for the bullpen. Unreliable changeup that sort of fumbles forward then down. Leaving it to be hit at the bottom of the zone. Develops the arm angle well to mask it for a fastball but his deception is what leads to this pitch. More of a two-pitch pitcher who incorporates this pitch every now and then. Was stronger with it in 2025 leading to soft contact but still missing the zone too often than not.

Control

45

A three-pitch mix with repeated mechanics and good high velo with his fastball. If his control is heavily focused on in 2026, he can stay as a mid-tier starter in the rotation. The command for his changeup is coming along. Can locate his fastball well with tail in the higher quadrants. Slider can be more of a sweeper at times but then added velo and cutter/slider hybrid movement on the ball. Needs more work from the stretch, wants to see improvement in his ability to get outs with runners on. Creates a lot of soft contact and gets hitters out but needs less walks. It will lead to longer outings. Ten of 21 starts under five innings in 2025.

Overall

A three-pitch mix with off balance mechanics that worked well this season. Started most games but I believe is better suited for being a reliever. Has two above average pitches and has a very lefty heavy delivery that works well facing LHB. His starts mostly go between 3 to four innings. Focusing his strength on being a three to six out type of pitcher can make him that much more consistent and add better velo to his already solid fastball. He can turn into a high-level bullpen option, at best a backend lower tier starter. Needs to add more strength to his core and legs to push more velo and spin on the ball, which promotes body control and creates swing-and-miss stuff from both the high fastball and trailing slider.

Aidan Curry

Born: 07/25/2002 (23)

Bats: Right Throws: Right Height: 6'5" Weight: 205 lbs

Primary Position: SP Secondary Position(s): RP

Physical/Health

MLB ETA: 2027

Risk Factor: Moderate

OFP: 50

Aidan is a tall lanky pitcher who has been healthy over the last couple seasons. Subject to the normal wear and tear. Still plenty of time to physically mature into his potential build. Long, thin waist with long arms and legs. Room to develop and build strength in his legs. Typical body for a SP. Good balance and body control.

Evaluator: Sean Negron

Affiliate: Hickory Crawdads – Texas Rangers

Report Date: 12/11/24 | 12/01/25

Dates Seen: 06/11/2024- 06/16/2024 | 07/08/2025 - 07/12/2025

Tool

Future Grade

Report

Fastball

65

Aidan's fastball sat in the low 90's in 2024. He can now dial it back to 94-96 with ease in 2025. Has been able to touch 98 mph. Solid 3/4 arm slot that has running action on the fastball. Pushes through the ball on his delivery creating a better downhill plane. I said he needed to find more velocity in 2024 and he found it in 2025. It feels like he has caught up to his long limbed body and has been able to use his 6'5" frame as a driving force with his velocity. He has done better with finding his release point and has been less and less losing his command, being able to pick the corners at an above average rate when he finds his command.

Slider

65

His secondary pitch is his best pitch. He's got a low 80's slider that breaks with above average horizontal and vertical breaks. He throws it with confidence. High ceiling with this pitch, just needs more consistency demanding the strike zone. Has a tendency to leave hangers over the plate with overuse. Was refreshingly good in 2024 and now has become a staple in 2025. I expect this pitch to help him ride to AA early in 2026.

Changeup

50

Reliable third pitch option that pulls the string well for hitters to chase. Sits around low to mid 80's. Longer vertical break. Shows flashes of feel to be putout stuff. Again, lacks consistency and strength behind the pitch but has shown much improvement since 2024 and has picked up more confidence with this three pitch repertoire. Needs more development to gain confidence and consistency over a long season.

Control

45

A limber but clean delivery. Since coming out of high school it was clear that his body outgrew the ways of utilizing his talent. Over the last two seasons he has grown tremendously as an athlete and has caught up in body maturity and uses his frame as a weapon with velocity and control. He needs to continue to add muscle to capitalize on his craft. He has two above average pitches and is still developing on a third. Continue to develop and he can be a threat level in AA by late 2026. If he gets more consistency, he has a higher ceiling of staying in the rotation. Shows better improvement in his last few starts after briefly moving into the bullpen. Built to be a starter. Goes out and wants to attack hitters then uses offspeed to change hitters timing. Seemed less athletic for his tall frame this year than the year prior. Flashes of clean delivery and improved control were much more consistent this season. Need to see more of that in 2026.

Overall

At 23, he needs to build up some strength in his legs to drive the ball out of his hands on his leg kicks. Hides the ball well. Has an above average fastball with good riding action. A slider that consistently gets hitters to swing and miss. Needs to develop his changeup a little more but also learn to pick his spots with every pitch. He has made a big jump in improvement since 2024 struggles. Curry can still reach his full potential with continued body maturity and discipline and could be a mid-tier starter at the highest level.

Creed Willems

Born: 06/04/2003

Bats: Left Throws: Right Height: 5'11" Weight: 225 lbs

Primary Position: C Secondary Position(s): 1B

Physical/Health

MLB ETA 2026 | Risk Factor Moderate | OFP 45

Normal height with a heavier/husky stature. Thick stocky legs that help with overall body strength. Size prevents certain movements in speed and on the basepaths but still works to be more agile and athletic. More wear and tear being a bigger build and a catcher. Will more than likely lean off catcher into a first baseman in 2026/27.

Evaluator: Sean Negron

Report Date: 12/11/2024 | 11/11/2025

Dates Seen: 04/09/2024- 08/25/2024 | 09/03/2025 - 09/09/2025

Affiliate: Bowie Baysox (AA)- Orioles

Tool*Future Grade*Report

Hit

45

Tall, stand still approach. Similar to Adam Dunn's stance. Hands up high toward the head with a medium leg kick. Has a revamped approach and stance at the plate. More up high with his swing. Leans back on a pitch and then drives it hard off the barrel. Pull-side approach but has shown ability to hit anywhere in the field. Recognizes spin very well off the hand has the potential to be an above average power hitter. Stronger batters eye. Avoids chasing the low or away pitches but will swing at the high heaters in or out of the zone. Looking to avoid more swing-and-miss in 2026. Further discipline is needed still at this level. Keeps strikeouts down and looks to get solid contact every swing. Provide more walks. Has time with a log-jam at position.

Power

60

Left-handed power catchers don't come too often in baseball. He brings extra youth to an already covered position in this organization and immediate raw power. Big and strong, using a simple approach to get barrel on ball. Has plenty of strength to drive the ball. Has provided more consistency with power. Looking at around 22/25 HR's per 162. Turns on pitches well using his extension and lower body explosiveness. A little much of an uppercut swing but provides a drop on his barrel to really drive the ball out of the park. Can develop into plus-power with further development. Want to see him have more power in gap-gap situations pushing for more doubles.

Baserunning & Speed

30

Willems is a stocky figure who doesn't move out of the box well. Runs well enough but has limited acceleration. Short strides, moving station to station. Late game replacement for better runners encouraged. Moves well, but not consistent enough to push the boundaries of an additional base.

Glove

55

Receiving and blocking are Creed's biggest struggles right now. Solid base with a great arm. Firm wrists with soft hands. Average framer that can turn balls into strikes on the edge. Needs to show more consistency of being able to block pitches in the dirt. Has gotten better at receiving as of late with his callup to Bowie. He continues to focus on that heavy going into 2026. Told me in 2024, that was his focus to be a two position player. This season It will be more physical strength training and being able to block the plate with an easier transition from glove to throwing hand. Working well at first base as well getting time over there. Handles the groundballs and tough hops better than most catchers that transition to potential first base. See first base as the main position by 2027.

Arm

70

One of his best attributes. The raw power he has in his arm strength. Can gun runners down with the best of them in minor league baseball. Believe this is why he is still being optioned at catcher. Clocked at over 90+ mph. Has a quick 1.89 average pop time and quick transfer. He has shown accuracy with his precision throws to nail runners out. He's a red-light catcher behind the plate on any baserunner trying to advance. One of the best minor league arms right now.

Overall

Creed is on his way into developing himself into a lefty power hitting backstop at the major league level. He's got his power bat as his carrying tool on offense and has improved significantly on defensiveness as a catcher. With Adley in Baltimore for a while Creed is a difficult position. Still with at least a year before being put into that conversation, Creed is making a name for himself that he belongs in AA and looks forward to the next challenge in AAA. Has good instincts from both sides of diamond and has the bat to be momentum shifter in each at-bat. Willems will need to further develop his catcher defense to stop letting the arm strength over-compensate for the defensive success with runners on. Creed is surprisingly athletic for his build and is very durable for the catcher position. Has the ability to play every day, great locker room presence and is a well put soft spoken team leader.